GURGUAME. On paper, Haryana has the eagacity to recycle about 180% of the domestic effluents it recleases into the Yamuna River. But four years after the NGT first ordered at horough clean up of billion plan, ordered by the recleases into the Yamuna River. But four years after the NGT first to ordered at horough clean up of billion of various stakeholders to billion of discharge at least 1140MLD of untreated, or partially treated, sewage per day into the Yamuna. Official numbers also indicate that Grungram and Faridabad districts are the state's biggest polluters. There findings are part of a transportation of the proposition p committee (MC), which was formed in July last year to over-see the Tribunal's 2015 judgment in the Manoj Misra case. The ini-tial deadline for the Yamuna revi-talisation plan, ordered by the NOT four years ago, was March 21, 2017. However, given the ina-bility of various stakeholders to comply with the judgment, the MC new root last year for more

Additionally, there are 18% till lagss in Haryana which directly or indirectly discharge about 40MLD untreated effluents into the Yamman. Thus, "a total 1180 MLD addomestic effluent is being discharger alout to the River and the Yamman. Thus," a total 1180 MLD addomestic effluent is being drain," the report noise while making a conservative estimate on the total volume of domestic effluents that eventually make their way into the Yamman. Experts pointed out that these drains are all originally meant to channel end/grainwater. This in itself is a violation of previous absence of proper maintenance of STPs. Obviously, the bulk of sev-age generated is not conveyed to the STPs due to absence of a sewer network or because the STPs are not functioning prop-erly, "the report states. "As a result, a small portion of the wastewater generated in Har-yana's Yamuna catchment is
